Planning a Short, Meaningful Day

Keep the timeline simple: getting ready, a short ceremony, portraits during golden hour and a relaxed dinner. Choose a photographer who is comfortable with small weddings and knows how to capture quiet, personal moments. Write your own vows if you like, since a small group makes it easier to speak from the heart without nerves getting in the way.

Couples who elope often celebrate with a larger party later, and the farm can host that too. The venue has welcomed rehearsal dinners, showers and reunions, so you might hold an intimate ceremony one season and a bigger celebration in the barn the next, with wedding venues near me friends from Daleville, Cloverdale and Roanoke joining you for the second event.

Small Touches That Matter

With only a few guests, every detail is noticed. A handwritten note at each place setting, a favorite family recipe on the menu or a small bouquet for each guest can make the day feel deeply personal. Consider a short private moment on the covered porch after the ceremony, just the two of you, looking out at the mountains before you rejoin your guests in the barn for dinner.
