Insurance Tactics After a Semi-Truck Crash

After a tractor-trailer crash, the injured person usually deals with an insurance company long before any courtroom. Trucking companies and their insurers tend to act quickly, and the steps they take early can shape the claim. Understanding these practices is one reason people talk with a truck accident attorney before giving statements or signing documents.

Federal insurance minimums for trucking companies

Minimum levels of financial responsibility are set by the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) in 49 CFR Part 387. A for-hire trucking company operating vehicles with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more needs at least $750,000 in public liability coverage to haul nonhazardous property in interstate commerce. Certain hazardous materials require $1,000,000 or $5,000,000, depending on the cargo. Those amounts are minimums, and some trucking companies carry more coverage through excess or umbrella policies. An MCS-90 endorsement may also apply to certain claims, so a truck crash attorney usually asks for every policy that could apply.

The company's first moves

Many trucking companies and insurers have procedures for sending investigators, adjusters or defense lawyers to a serious crash quickly. They may photograph the scene, download the engine control module (ECM), interview witnesses and document the damage. There is nothing improper about that work, but the information they collect goes to the trucking company first. A truck accident lawyer can send a preservation letter https://atlantatruckaccidentlawyers.wiki/checking-a-firms-truck-practice/ asking the company to keep the truck, the ECM and ELD data, camera footage and the driver's records.

Practices an injured person may see

An insurance adjuster may call soon after the crash and ask for a recorded statement. In many cases there is no obligation to give one to the other side's insurer, although a person's own policy may require cooperation with their own insurer. Statements given while hurting or medicated can be used later to dispute the claim. Adjusters may also request broad medical authorizations that open records unrelated to the crash.

Quick settlement offers are another common practice. An offer can come before the full extent of an injury is known, and accepting it generally means signing a release that ends the claim. Insurers also tend to argue comparative negligence by pointing to the injured driver's speed or lane position. Some also dispute injuries by pointing to preexisting conditions or gaps in treatment.

Surveillance and social media

After a crash, insurers sometimes review public social media posts, looking for photos or comments that seem to conflict with a reported injury. In some claims they also hire investigators to film the injured person in public places. A single photo can be misread without context, and a brief clip seldom shows what came before or after it. Many people post less while a claim is open, and keep a simple record of their symptoms, missed work and medical appointments.

What goes into the value of a truck claim

Damages in a truck injury claim can include medical expenses, lost wages, reduced earning capacity, property damage, and pain and suffering. In a wrongful death case, the available claims and who may bring them depend on state law. A commercial vehicle accident attorney will usually collect medical records and bills, plus wage documents, before making a demand. Health insurers, Medicare or Medicaid may have liens or reimbursement rights that have to be resolved from a settlement.

Fees and expectations

Many truck accident lawyers work on a contingency fee, meaning the fee is a percentage of any recovery and is spelled out in a written agreement. No lawyer, insurer or article can promise a particular result, and this is general information rather than legal advice.