Who Can Be Held Responsible for an 18-Wheeler Crash?

Unlike many car crashes, a semi-truck crash often involves several potentially responsible parties. The driver, the trucking company, the owner of the trailer, the company that loaded the cargo and the manufacturer of a defective part can each play a role. Sorting out legal responsibility is one of the first tasks for a tractor-trailer crash lawyer, because each responsible party may atlantatruckaccidentlawyers.wiki have separate insurance.

The driver's conduct

The starting point is usually the driver's conduct, such as speeding, following too closely, unsafe lane changes, distraction, impairment or fatigue. Commercial drivers must hold a commercial driver's license (CDL) under 49 CFR Part 383 and follow the driving rules in 49 CFR Part 392, which include limits on texting and hand-held phone use. A safety violation does not prove fault by itself, but in many states it can serve as evidence of negligence, and some states treat it as negligence per se. A truck wreck lawyer compares the driver's conduct against these rules.

Liability of the trucking company

If the driver is an employee working within the scope of the job, the trucking company is generally answerable for the driver's negligence under vicarious liability, sometimes called respondeat superior. The company may also face direct claims based on its own conduct, including negligent hiring, negligent retention, negligent supervision and negligent entrustment. Under the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations, a trucking company must keep a driver qualification file under 49 CFR Part 391, run drug and alcohol testing under 49 CFR Part 382, and inspect, repair and maintain its trucks under 49 CFR Part 396. Missing or incomplete records can support a direct claim against the company, and the driver qualification file is often among the first documents a tractor-trailer accident lawyer requests.

Owner-operators and leased trucks

Some drivers are owner-operators who lease their trucks to a trucking company. The leasing rules in 49 CFR Part 376 require the lease to give the trucking company exclusive possession, control and use of the equipment during the lease, which can matter if the company says the driver was an independent contractor. The USDOT number and company name on the cab, along with the bill of lading and the lease itself, help identify which company was operating the truck. An 18-wheeler accident attorney typically requests these documents early.

Shippers and freight brokers

Shifting or falling cargo can contribute to rollovers and jackknife crashes. The cargo securement rules in 49 CFR Part 393 set requirements for tiedowns and securing loads, and a shipper or loading company that controlled how the freight was loaded may share responsibility in some cases. A freight broker that arranged the load raises separate questions, including federal preemption, and the answer depends on the claim and the facts.

Manufacturers and repair shops

If brakes, tires, steering parts or an underride guard fail because of a defect, the manufacturer may face a product liability claim. A maintenance contractor that performed faulty repairs can also be named. Telling a defect apart from poor maintenance usually requires inspecting the parts before they are repaired or scrapped.

How fault and insurance fit together

Under 49 CFR Part 387, for-hire interstate trucks with a gross vehicle weight rating of 10,001 pounds or more that haul nonhazardous property must carry at least $750,000 in public liability coverage, and certain hazardous materials require higher minimums. Most states use comparative negligence, which can reduce damages by the injured person's share of fault, while a few still follow contributory negligence. A commercial truck accident attorney looks at every atlanta truck accident lawyer party because one policy may not cover the full loss. This is general information rather than legal advice, and it does not predict the result of any claim.
