Cost of Divorce Fairfax VA What to Expect The Irving Law Firm The cost of a divorce in Fairfax, Virginia varies significantly depending on whether the case is uncontested or contested, the complexity of the marital estate, and whether the parties can specialist criminal defense attorney reach agreements or whether the court must decide disputed issues. The Irving Law Firm is transparent with clients from the outset about what their specific case is likely to involve in terms of time, legal fees, and other costs, so that financial expectations are aligned with reality from the beginning of the attorney-client relationship. Court filing fees in Fairfax County Circuit Court add a baseline cost that applies to all divorces regardless of complexity. The Fairfax Circuit Court publishes a civil fee schedule that reflects current filing and service costs. These fees are separate from attorney fees but must be budgeted as part of the overall cost of the divorce proceeding. Attorney fees in a divorce case are typically based on the time spent by the attorneys and paralegals working on the matter. Uncontested divorces with a completed written separation agreement and no contested issues require significantly less attorney time than contested cases that involve discovery, hearings, and trial preparation. The Irving Law Firm structures its billing so that paralegal time and lower-level attorney work is billed at rates appropriate to the level of work, which clients have noted makes the overall cost more reasonable than it might be at firms that bill all work at senior partner rates.
