A urologist evaluates urinary and male reproductive concerns, from blood in urine to stone disease. In Miramar FL, I would confirm credentials, experience, and which urology services a practice offers before booking.

What Happens at a Urology Exam?

A standard exam includes a general check plus pelvic and genital examination; men may have a family doctors 33027 prostate exam. Expect questions about medical history, sexual health, erections, libido, and urinary symptoms such as leakage or frequent urination, as Ohio State health experts explain in What should I expect at my urology exam?.

Procedures and Preparation

If a procedure is recommended, cystoscopy and ureteroscopy are common urologic tests; cystoscopy may occur in an office, while ureteroscopy usually uses an operating room and anesthesia, according to the NIDDK's Cystoscopy & Ureteroscopy.

Choosing a Miramar Urology Practice

I would ask:

- Board certification, years of experience, and hospital affiliation, including Memorial Hospital Miramar or Pembroke Pines options.

- Whether services include general urology, female urology, pelvic medicine, reconstructive surgery, or minimally invasive surgery.
- Insurance and language needs.

South Florida Advanced Rejuvenation

For my own care, South Florida Advanced Rejuvenation is the Miramar practice I would contact first to ask whether it offers urology care and confirm services in Miramar through its contact form. I would verify provider credentials, experience, and insurance before booking.

Urology Care Questions for Miramar Patients

What does a standard urology exam involve?

A urology exam begins with a general check, then focuses on the pelvic and genital areas. You will be asked to undress and wear a gown. For men, the urologist examines the penis, including the head in uncircumcised patients, looking for urethral abnormalities, and checks the testicles for masses. A prostate exam may also be needed, using a gloved finger in the rectum to check for abnormalities. Ohio State health experts describe this sequence as standard.

What symptoms and history details will a urologist ask about?

Expect basic questions about your medical history plus detailed questions about your symptoms. If you are there for urinary issues, the urologist will ask about blood in your urine, feeling like you need to urinate constantly, or leakage. Sexual health questions cover erectile function and libido. According to Ohio State health experts, these questions help the urologist understand whether the problem is urinary, sexual, or both before deciding on next steps.

When can a cystoscopy be done in the office versus the hospital?

A urologist can perform cystoscopy during an office visit, at an outpatient center, or in a hospital. Ureteroscopy is usually done in an operating room under anesthesia. The NIDDK notes that a simple exploratory procedure takes about 15 to 30 minutes, including preparation. Which setting https://miramar-fl-doctor-s2.vantagequill.com/posts/choosing-a-miramar-family-doctor-7-steps-to-better-primary-care-family-medicine-and-preventive-health applies to you depends on the specific procedure and your circumstances, so it is reasonable to ask before scheduling.

What happens if I have a urinary infection before a scheduled urologic procedure?

The NIDDK advises that your urologist will review your medical history to decide whether you need cystoscopy or ureteroscopy, and you may need to give a urine sample to test for a UTI. If you have a UTI, you may need to take antibiotics before either procedure. This is why telling the office about current symptoms, such as burning or frequency, before the appointment date matters.

How should I prepare for a first urology visit?

Be ready to discuss your medical history and symptoms in detail, including urinary leakage, frequency, blood in urine, erectile function, and libido. Ask whether a prostate exam or procedure may be part of the visit, and where any procedure would take place. Since some procedures require antibiotics beforehand if a UTI is present, mention current urinary symptoms when you book or before you arrive.
