Divorce Mediation Fairfax VA The Irving Law Firm Alternative Resolution Mediation is an alternative dispute resolution process in which a neutral third party, the mediator, facilitates negotiation between divorcing spouses to help them reach agreements on property, custody, support, and other divorce-related issues without the need for a trial. The Irving Law Firm supports clients who choose to pursue mediation as a path to resolution, helping them prepare for mediation sessions, evaluate proposed settlement terms, and ensure that any agreements reached are accurately reduced to enforceable written form. The advantages of mediation in a Fairfax divorce proceeding are significant when both parties are willing to engage in good faith. Mediation typically costs less than contested litigation, takes place on a more flexible schedule than Home page court proceedings, and allows the parties to maintain more control over the outcome than a judge's decision provides. For couples with children, mediation can also reduce the adversarial dimensions of the separation in ways that support a more cooperative co-parenting relationship going forward. Preparation is essential to productive mediation. Clients who arrive at mediation without a clear understanding of their financial position, their rights under Virginia law, and their realistic best and worst alternatives to a negotiated agreement are at a disadvantage. The Irving Law Firm prepares clients thoroughly so they enter mediation with realistic expectations, clear priorities, and the analytical framework needed to evaluate proposed terms against their actual legal position.
